September Update

Another event has passed, and the Rebellettes of Cork take another All-Ireland camogie crown.

Their 8th title in the last 14 years, the People's Republic of Cork certainly know how to produce sporting women of the highest calibre.

Just like Dublin in the football last week, the favourite wins this selection. And also like last week, 56% of the entrants picked them.

In this instance, the correct selection earns four points, which tends to show that the camogie championship is more open than the men's football.

The county that produced Sonia O'Sullivan continues to produce female athletes that the entire country can be proud of.

Competition Update

Sarah Mannion is holding on by her fingertips, but she's still got the Top Spot with only one selection to go.

The Charging Light Brigade of Noel Flaherty, Martin Scarry and Barry Flood are moving towards the finishing line at frightening speed.

It reminds me of that scene in "The Matrix" where all the bullets are flying at Neo and he is dodging them in slow-motion.

Can Sarah dodge them for one more week and claim the prize? Who is going to get the nod at the line first?

Blue pill, Red Pill ?

The first three on the leader board have been in the Top 10 since May, so they have shown remarkable consistency all year.

Sarah has some high quality sports fans trying to catch her.

Noel Flaherty is a fervent Spurs and West United fan, so he knows Eamonn Deacy Park well.

We already advised that Martin Scarry was one to watch from early in the summer. This Padraig Pearse clubman would bleed hurls and sliotars if he got a cut, so they both know their stuff

Barry Flood is also moving into position at the right time.

With a possible 9 points on offer for the All-Ireland Ladies Football Final, anyone in the Top 12 could claim the top prize.

Cork win is 4 points, and a Dublin win is 9 points.

If this competition has taught me anything, it is that we don't know what will happen!
